Reflection

We're good at remembering the last hours of people close to us. What they said, how they were, the details of the how, why and wherefore of those final hours are indelibly recorded-never to be forgotten. Great attention is given to remembering and carrying out the deathbed wish to the letter. We give priority to the last word, and file it away mentally as the most important. The bitter experience is when we weep for what might have been, could have been or should have been-but too late.

Applying that to Jesus, we have his last will and testament. It's summed up in one word 'love'. And like other terms like 'war', 'fear', 'hate', 'envy', 'joy', little words mean a lot. The greatest of human realities are often summed up in the smallest of words. Love is not the easiest commandment, because love always demands a response. To believe with your heart that you have a special privileged place in the heart of another, can only draw a response of love. True of a close friend, true for God.
